About child discipline

Whack!

“Johnny! I’ve told you a hundred times not to tease your little sister. Maybe now you’ll stop!” Johnny stomped ahead of his mother and the stroller she was pushing. He caught up with his dad and said, “That’s one thing I hate about people. They hit you.” Dad replied, “Only when you do something wrong.”

Unless you are unusual, you’ve been part of a scene like this yourself. Of course, we all know what Johnny’s parents wanted to teach him: not to tease his sister, and to obey his parents.

Here’s what he learned instead:

- That he has reason to hate people: They’ll hurt him.
- That he should be especially on guard against getting hurt by the people closest to him—who love him.
- That it’s all right for “big people” to hurt “little people.”
- That if a “big” person hurts him, it’s a sure sign he has done something wrong.

It’s clear that Johnny’s parents didn’t teach him what they meant to teach. Instead, they may be breeding resentment, anger, guilt and violence in their son. If this is their normal way of dealing with him, he may become withdrawn, suspicious, and incapable of giving or receiving love. He could become the neighborhood bully or a juvenile delinquent. His tough exterior would only hide the hurt and shame he felt as a little boy. This story is sad and all too typical. Fortunately, there is a better way to discipline our children.

Why Discipline?

There are two reasons to discipline children. The first is obvious: We need to keep behavior within certain limits that we, as parents, set to prevent destructive or violent acts. You can’t allow a toddler to run into the street, a two-year-old to play with grandma’s vase, a five-year-old to kick during a tantrum, or a teenager to buy things the family can’t afford.

It’s important to set those limits wisely. Otherwise we can find ourselves defending rules we really don’t believe in or not enforcing rules because even we know they are unreasonable. Then a child discovers that we don’t mean what we say and that we don’t need to be obeyed.

The second reason to discipline children has to do with a longer-term goal that is harder to accomplish. That goal is to teach our children to establish their own limits and rules that spring from the conscience and heart after we have faded from the picture. In other words, parents are responsible for teaching their children self-discipline.

Discipline that comes from within cultivates good feelings: inner order, calm, a sense of security and direction. It lets us arrange the parts of our lives into a harmonious lifestyle. It helps us balance our own needs, rights and desires with those of others. What a wonderful skill to teach a child!

With these two goals in mind—keeping behavior within limits and teaching self-discipline—let’s go back and look at Johnny’s parents again. Did they accomplish the first goal—getting Johnny to stop teasing his sister? Perhaps. But it’s likely they’ll only get temporary cooperation. He may not tease his sister while mom and dad are around, but what happens when they turn their backs may be another story.

And what about their long-range goals—teaching him to love his sister, to care about her feelings and safety and to respect her rights? Instead, the slap on his behind may have taught him resentment, hatred, fear, and avoidance.

Disciplining a child often turns out to be a confusing and emotional experience.

That’s why it’s helpful to keep the two goals of discipline firmly in mind. They can help you tell the difference between your need to guide your child’s behavior, and your need to blow off steam.

Here are some suggestions to help you discipline your child effectively

1. Recognize the temptation to use violence (a temptation every parent faces) as a sign that you are feeling weak and helpless toward your child. You are at your wit’s end and don’t know what to do. Back off, cool off, and try something else. Violence only hurts. Sometimes it does physical damage. And remember that each blow dealt a child destroys dignity, self-respect, confidence and courage. It contributes to a lifelong sense of brutality and hatred that the child will have to struggle with for the rest of his or her life.
Help is not far away.
If you ever think you’re in a situation you can’t handle, don’t hesitate to get help. Maybe you need to talk to your spouse, a friend or a neighbor.

For parent education and support groups in your area, contact a County Extension Family Living Agent at https://flp.ces.uwex.edu/ OR Prevent Child Abuse Wisconsin at www.Preventchildabusewi.org

608-256-3374 OR 1-800-CHILDREN

You can also call a parent helpline for help:

Milwaukee: 414-671-0566
Madison: 608-241-2221

If you want professional counseling, call a local social agency or county social services/human services department. If the agency you call doesn’t offer the kind of service you want, ask to be referred somewhere else.

Content for this publication was developed by the State of Minnesota Department of Public Welfare. It may be reproduced without permission. A credit line would be appreciated. Adapted from a publication by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Material drawn from “The Aggressive Child” by Fritz Redl and David Wineman.

For additional copies, contact the Child Care Information Center - 1.800.362.7353 or visit www.ccic.wi.gov